

Bridge "de la Blanche"

Attribution : (Libre de droit)

Useful information

Category : Discovery and recreation

Rating : No rating

Description

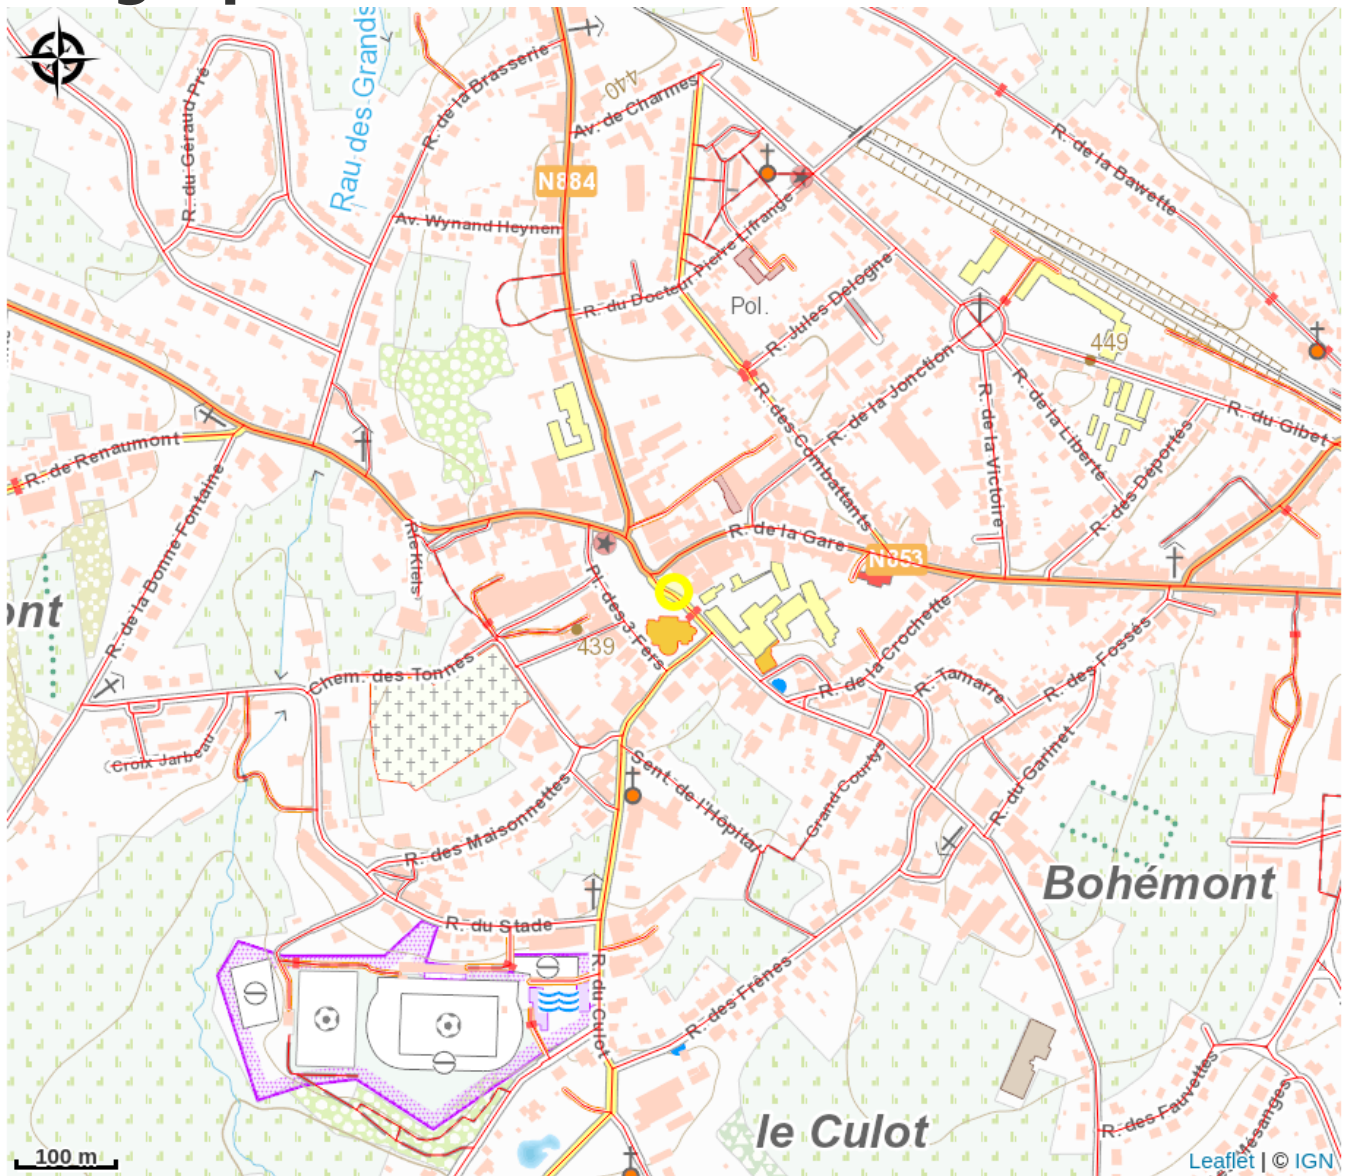

The bridge was destroyed by the Germans in 1944 despite the resistance and built again after the war just before the railway was closed.

The name Pont de la Blanche comes from the name of the she-owner of a little pub nearby the slate mines that disappeared when the railway was built

Discovery categories

Built heritage, Industrial site/building, bridge, engineering structure.

Geographical location

All useful information

Contact

6880 - Bertrix